

Tea Tran:

I implemented the function for admin to add (with Jialin's help) and remove users, as well as to change a user's username and password. I helped with debugging add habit.

Regarding adding/removing user and changing user's name/password, there are no known bugs.

Jialin Wang:

I implemented the functions/user stories that allow the web app user to view all the users. I also implemented a survey database and functions to view all the surveys, add surveys, and modify their names, question, and options. In addition, I implemented a way to add and change user responses to existing surveys. Finally, I helped to debug parts of the functions to add and change habits.

There are currently no bugs in the viewing users or surveys, or in adding or changing surveys or user responses. There are some pages with inconsistent backlinking to previous pages, but this is a cosmetic/convenience issue. With regards to the parts of the habit-related functions I worked on, the function to add habits is currently bug-free. However, when deleting habits, the habit is somehow not deleted properly, an error which persists when changing the habit's name (a habit with the new name is in the database, but the old-name habit remains).

Matthew Goldsmith:

I did the initial implementation of the Habit storage system. I as well implemented viewing Habit info, updating the name of a habit, adding a tag for a habit, and deleting a habit.

There were some bugs when I finished the initial implementation of Habit, but they have since been fixed.

Cassandra Menshouse:

I made the page and link for going to a user's habits. I also added to and fixed the code for viewing a habit's information, adding habits, updating the name of a habit, adding a tag for a habit, and deleting a habit. After having these functions mostly working, though, Tea, Jialin, and I realized that the initial implementation of the Habit storage system did not work correctly, so the habits were not properly being stored. As a result, the three of us re-implemented how Habits are stored for the Users. The three of us then also debugged the function that adds habits. I also worked on updating habit names and deleting habits, which no longer worked, since we had changed the implementation of Habits.

When a habit name is updated or a habit is deleted, the page stating that the changes were properly made is reached, but once the user returns to the page of their habits, the altered habit remains the same. This issue appears to be a bug with our use of the `.save()`, `.delete()`, and/or `.set()` functions, which we are still trying to solve. Adding tags to a habit and going to a habit's daily entries are not working properly, because there was no time left to get these functions working after all the time that had to be spent rewriting the code for all of the other habit pages and functions that had used the first Habit storage implementation.
